

Authors: Cameron Ball, Daniel Baker, Haoran Yin(lan), Tucker Baron

Problem Statement: Our users are upset with the lack of options found in vending machines. Our solution should provide a way for users to have a greater diversity of products available in vending machines.

Who is experiencing the problem:

Students and faculties who don't have time for a proper meal but could not find the options they want due to the limited variety of choices in the vending machine.

What is the problem: The problem is that the vending machines found across campus lack a variety of products to choose from to satiate the desires of the wide range of faculty and staff.

Where does the problem present itself:

- College Campuses
- Workplaces
- Schools

Why does it matter:

Having more options will make users more likely to want to use the vending machines. The customers will be happy because they will be able to get things that they want and the more users that are using the machine the more money will be made.